Doctoral Student Survey Award

- Eligibility: Current doctoral students who are members of the DPOP.
- Nominations: Students will self-nominate by submitting a five-page proposal that describes their research question, the relevant existing research and theory, and their study design. The proposals must also contain an appendix listing the question wording and procedures to be used. (Although the proposals must be authored only by doctoral students, students may collaborate with faculty on any resulting research articles).
- Evaluation Criteria: Developed in 2022, this award is designed to fund survey research for a doctoral student. The winning proposal will earn $1,000 to collect survey data over the next year, with the findings to be presented at the ASC Annual Meeting the following year.

SCOTT DUXBURY

Scott Duxbury is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. His public opinion research focuses on the role of the public opinion in shaping the racial politics of mass incarceration. It has appeared in American Sociological Review, Social Forces, and Public Opinion Quarterly. His on-going research examines how political polarization has affected policy networks connecting state actors, especially with respect to reduce rates of crime, policy collaboration, crime policy passage, and decreases in the incarceration rate. Outside of policy and public opinion, he carries out an active research agenda on criminal networks, big data policing, darknet drug trafficking, and social network methods. His work on these topics have appeared in Criminology, American Journal of Sociology, Social Problems, Sociological Methodology, and Sociological Methods & Research, among other outlets, and has been funded by the National Science Foundation. His forthcoming book Longitudinal Network Models provides a lay-of-the-land for practitioners interested in navigating the range of tools available to analyzing longitudinal network data.
